GAS CURE FOR WHOOPING COUGH

Babies and Asthmatics Benefited a Visit to the Works.

To take the air of a gas works is specific for whooping cough, a visit to the Washington city works recently bringing into view a number of baby carriages and juvenile visitors suffering with this complaint. The Star, of the city, says:

What the young ones were inhaling with benzene that was the odor of the impurities was of the fresh gas. The purifiers were 25 to 30 feet long and 2 to 3 feet in diameter, 10 to 15 feet high. Each purifier held seventy-five to one hundred wooden trays, with perforated bottoms, and was filled with crushed oyster shells were piled to a height of one foot. The gas had been passed into the tanks and beneath the trays, while the tanks were closed, and allowed to accumulate through the holes and pass through powdered oyster shells. Ammonia and other things were absorbed by the lime, while the gas passed through it. The lime was nearly white when first put in the purifier trays. When the gas was lifted some of it was green, some red, some yellow, and some white, depending upon the kind of coal used.

"The ammonia and the coal tar I got a good deal to do with effecting the cure of the throat affections," said Keen-Ridley. "Doctors recommend it to patients who haven't the means to employ the usual physicians' remedies. I know it is effective, for inhaling that aw-smelling stuff has cured me of colds time and time again."

"Then you don't believe that a garage house is an unhealthy spot?" the visitor asked.

"What do you do with the oyster shells after they are impregnated with the sperm impurities?"

"Send some to the dump and sell some to the fertilizer man."

to the farmers. There is no sort of this so good as this impregnated lime cover vegetable or garden beds. It cures death to the numberless insects that feed upon and destroy vegetables and flowers.

"Thousands and thousands of children have been cured of whooping cough in this room since this old gas-house was built, and thousands more will be cured. It's a regular resort for the sick little ones whenever whooping cough is epidemic."

"That's why I don't like to hear people grumble about gas-houses. They are for the benefit, and not a detriment, and the houses are always located where the disagreeable odor of the gas will do less damage to surrounding property used for dwelling purposes."

arrested on suspicion of having caused the death of Thomas Walsh, aged thirty-four. Both were attached to the Marine Corps at the Charlestown Navy-Yard. Walsh was found lying on the sidewalk to-night with several bad gashes on his head and died the way to the station.

constitution and the prompt and careful attention she received, was the worse for her journey through the snow. She awoke at 8 o'clock after a long sleep, and, save that she felt very weak and ached in all her limbs, there seemed to be nothing the matter with her.

An examination proved that the human lars had evidently been on the spot. Heavy footmarks in the snow showed they had had come close to the house, but the study window being darkened and no means of access presenting itself, they had retired baffled. Wilford contrived to get a message to Mr. Hylton, explaining where Teresa was and what had brought her.

Those days of her enforced imprisonment at the manor were wonderful happy days to both herself and Wilford but when the snow so far gave way that he was able to take her home to paradise was only broken up for a little while. Within a month Terrence went back to the manor as its mistress.—Chicago News.
